From the modern Church of San Fiorano, characterized by the peculiar portal designed by the artist (from Villasanta) Giovanni Colombo, you will reach Garibaldi Road and Villa Notari, a wonderful building dated back to the XIX century. In this residence the Bolognese writer, Umberto Notari, lived and hosted important people during the first years of 1900, including the poetess Ada Negri and Filippo Tommaso Marinetti, father of the Futurist movement. On the other side stands the abandoned Tronconi factory, which is a really good example of industrial archaeology from the past century. Taking the underpass and following Garibaldi Road you will walk near the Green Area of Rodari Park (on Calvino Road) ending in Martiri della Libertà Square, where the Town Hall stands. Walking to west along Garibaldi Road, immediately on the left, you can see two significant maps representing the town in 1721 and in 1855, in addition to a huge reproduction of a cartography of Lambro River, originally sketched by engineer Barca in 1615. Following this way, you will reach Camperio Square; there you will find a peculiar Fountain whose drainages are named after four ditches, which once flowed in Villasanta from Lambro River and Molgorana creek. Nearby, in Gervasoni Square, you can see a statue made in bronze created by Maurizio Dusio and dedicated to the laundresses of Villasanta; behind it, in Ada Negri Street, a copper bas-relief made by Federico Severino can also be seen. It represents the craftsmanship which once was typically local. Following Confalonieri Road you will meet Villa Camperio, built in the XVII century, which nowadays is property of the municipality. Here stands the “Aldo Moro” Public Library where the Camperio Archive Group is preserved, too: it consists in a series of historical photos, books and documents. From here, you can get to the Sant’Anastasia Church situated beside a Museum of Sacred Art (MUAS), which can be visited. Of great importance the little chest with valuables and ornaments used during liturgical functions. Before entering the cycling lane which leads to the Monza Park Entrance, you will walk across Oggioni Square, where the panel named “Com’era Com’è”, reports the history of the square, showing it in a postcard dated back to the 40s.
